

Change we can count on?

09-19-08

This election cycle has been one of the most contradictory, contentious and vicious in my memory. It's especially distressing since so much hangs in the balance on this election. The future of America and the "American dream" as I know it seems to be clinging to life by threads. What exists now is a mere vestige of what was intended by the framers of this great nation, further illuminated by over 200 years of historical events which have brought us all to this particular point in time.

Have no doubt about it, Obama would not be the Democratic candidate were it not for the efforts of megawealthy Marxists. I fear all will be lost if the Marxists succeed in getting Obama elected. If McCain is elected, America still has a fighting chance of not descending into another despotic Roman Empire. If Obama is elected, the damage will be irreparable and the last vestiges of the Republic once known as these States United, will fade from view and disappear into eternity. Our once great stature, like the Roman Republic preceding its eventual turn to an Empire, is fading fast because we have a growing contingent of constituents who share no commonalities, who've never known or been taught transcendent values, who've grown accustomed to handouts and freebies and will throw their votes to whoever shows more promise of bringing more of it to the table, and frankly have no understanding of history.

Neither side really has any serious claim on maintaining or restoring our constitutional principles, with the sole exception of McCain's choice as VP. Both sides suffer from serious erosion of hard fought and high priced ground that was earned by blood sweat and tears over the three preceding centuries. Where we are now as a nation is as disconnected from our founding principles as we could possibly be, and still be able to call ourselves American. Hopefulness seems to grow dimmer as time goes on and as we drift further from those noble origins.

Corruption seems to be a standing general order for any one that manages to make it to the inside of the beltway these days. We have a congress with perhaps the lowest all time approval rating, at least in my lifetime. Congress has a p-a-t-h-e-t-i-c 91% disapproval rating! For being one of our three main branches of government, and our most important governing body, this sets the stage for the dreaded turn from a Senate governed Republic, to a dictatorial Empire, just as what occurred to the Romans of the Third Century.

So 9% approve of our congress? Who are these 9% anyway? Are they human? It's like a really bad alien or zombie movie where the plot involves surreptitious replacement of all key positions of government. The other two branches? They don't seem far behind congress. I don't know what the 9% are seeing, but I'd have to request evidence of brain activity and normal body temperature before hearing any more from them.

We have a political climate where it's doubtful to me that it's even possible that a serious change agent could survive in Washington D.C.'s hardball political cesspool. Anyone that looks to be a hopeful is immediately smeared into oblivion and marginalized by a willing accomplice media and hoards of foot soldiers that march lock-step with the established cronyistic political elite. Contrast this with the time immediately following the American Revolution. No one was clamoring and stumping for their shot at power. George Washington was offered America as his Kingdom. He declined, respectfully, gracefully and reluctantly agreed to serve merely as our new nation's first President. Can you imagine this sort of humility in politics today? Can you imagine someone with that degree of respectability surviving in D.C today? Not a chance.

Those who refuse to sell their souls to the cronies (highest bidders) are pseudo-blacklisted in the most underhanded of ways, guaranteeing they won't be able to accomplish a thing. Those who do, fall right in line with those who are causing the 91% disapproval rating in the first place, guaranteeing more of the same. If I could flip a switch and replace them all with random picks from every city and town in the country, I'd do it in a heartbeat and those random picks would certainly do a better job and would easily beat a 9% approval rating. It's truly a disgraceful state of affairs.

On one side, led by long-time Washington insiders who allegedly represent "government of the people, by the people, for the people", although I doubt there'd be enough evidence for any convictions on that charge. As for the Presidential candidate choice, I'm being generous in saying that McCain probably has the reputation he's got because of years of trying simply to survive in an inhospitable environment. Perhaps he'd be a bit shinier if D.C wasn't so corrosive an environment? We'll never know. I will say that his pick of Governor Palin as a running mate was sheer brilliance and has restored some of my lost faith in our political system.

On the other side, "limousine liberals", all of whom seem to be multi-millionaire attorneys, can't seem to scratch up enough integrity between them to make a compelling case for anything convincing, except for buddies appointing buddies to high paid positions and freebie multimillion dollar home loans. AKA: The Mortgage Crisis. Yet, they claim to know the plight of America's middle class, poor and downtrodden? HA! On top of that, The Chosen One, who allegedly brings "change we need", picks one of the croniest of Washington D.C.'s old guard crony's as his VP? Stunningly underwhelming. As a Delaware native who is familiar with Biden, that's just pure insult. In trying to marginalize McCain's VP pick and bolster their choice of a Presidential candidate, the best they seem to be able to come up with is: Pontius Pilate was a Governor and Jesus was a "community organizer"? It's proof to me that none of them really know the story at all and were just looking for a sound bite. Typical.

(NOTE TO ALL LIBS: Pontius Pilate, The Roman Prefect (Governor) of Judea, wanted to release Jesus, in whom he could find no fault. Pilate RELUCTANTLY freed the criminal known as Barabbas instead and kept the innocent Jesus incarcerated for execution. Pilate did so ONLY after repeated attempts to persuade “the community” otherwise. Pilate granted the demands of “the community” that wanted a known murderer freed, instead of an innocent man,...according to Roman Law and “the community’s” insistence. This is the reason for his symbolic hand washing. Governor Pilate was personally convinced of Jesus’ innocence, as was King Herod, and didn’t want an innocent man’s blood on his hands. According to law, he was forced to yield to the bloodthirsty “community’s” demand for His execution. Where are you at Susan Sarandon? Sean Penn? Alec Baldwin? Michael Moore? Reference Matthew 27:1-26, if you can put the Kool-Aid down long enough to read a bit.)

The Marxist’s are throwing everything, including the kitchen sink, at traditional American’s in this election. Newsprint, television, internet, text messages, emails. I’ve even heard Whoopi Goldberg make the ridiculous statement about her fear of the return of slavery. She’s not serious, but she was serious about scaring people of color. I’ve heard Matt Damon’s bitter and vile spewings about Governor Palin. Truly reprehensible. Guess what Matt? You’re now on my list of Hollywood globalist elites (losers) I will no longer support with one dime of my hard earned money.

It’s all about fear, that’s all. They know they can’t force you to make a certain choice, but they can make every effort to scare you into choosing their guy. If you love this nation as I do, and all that She was meant to stand for, there is only one choice this election. It’s more of a final chance to stop the Marxist’s really. Have no doubt, the Marxist’s want to bring “change” all right, the kind of change that inches us closer to a Stalinistic type of rule. You remember him right? The guy that murdered 50 million of his own countryman.

God help us if the Marxist’s succeed...
